Program Description
Students will spend two weeks in China studying the past, present and future of agriculture of China. We will station at Shandong Agricultural University and invite Chinese faculty to lecture on crop production systems in China. We will have a few field trips to visit farms, and seed production and agricultural-chemical industries. Sales and management experts of American agriculture-related companies in China (lectures by representatives of DuPont, Monsanto, Syngenta and Pioneers) will be invited to give seminars on their business development and management. In addition, we expect the students experience culture, history, cuisine and language of China during the trip. This study abroad program will provide the crucial knowledge for students to prepare themselves well for their future careers associated with Chinese agriculture.
